Seal Watch San Diego, which is run by the Animal Protection and Rescue League, had an employee at the Childrens Pol public beach harrass two female junior high students who were working on a school project at the beach. The two students were suiting up to dive at the beach when an employee of Seal Watch San Diego told the two students they better not go on the beach or else. The Seal Watch San Diego employee not only threatened the two students, but also told them they would be videotaped and the video would be posted on YouTube. One of the parents of the two female students told the Seal Watch San Diego employee to leave the students alone and the employee threatened to videotape her license plate and post it on the internet.

The two junior high students told the parent they wanted to leave immediately because they did not feel comfortable being at the beach with this violent seal activist (Seal Watch San Diego employee).
